OCI is delighted to launch its membership drive with this lecture by the internationally renowned orchid expert and conservation biologist from Western Australia, Dr. Kingsley Dixon.

Kingsley is Director of Science at Kings Park and Botanic Garden and has been instrumental in building up a programme of research on conservation including micropropagation, seed storage, seed germination and the role of smoke, mycorrhizal associations, population genetics and reintroduction, among other topics. He heads a vibrant research team, including many postgraduate students. He is much in demand as a speaker to a wide variety of audiences.

The ticket price will be deducted from the membership fee if you sign up for 2008 OCI membership (£20 individual, £30 family, £10 student) at the lecture.
